

ALAMEDA COUNTY STUDY (NOT REVIEWED)

This long term population-based prospective study of residents in Alameda County, California investigates social and behavioral risks factors for morbidity, functioning and health. With the aging of this cohort, data are becoming increasingly valuable for examining the life-long cumulative effects of social and behavioral factors on a well-characterized population.

Listing of study variables & measurement of variables

- marital and life satisfaction
- parenting
- physical activities
- employment
- childhood experiences
- demographic information: age, race, height, weight, education, income and religion
- mortality data